CITY OF NEWPORT

✓ The City of Newport, Ky., is located on the eastern shores of the Licking River, directly opposite the city of Covington and is a municipality of approximately 35,000 persons. It is the largest town in Campbell County and has an approximate altitude of 511 feet above sea level.

During the past quarter century the city has had three forms of government. In 1911 the old aldermanic form of government was abandoned for the new Commission Form of government and in 1931 this form was abandoned for the newer City Manager of City Charter form. This is the form now in vogue.

Newport is a manufacturing town and has one of the largest rolling mills in the middlewest. It is the home of a large lithographing plant, a large flour mill, a big brewery and wood and lumber products are manufactured here. It has an excellent school system, a fine police and fire department.

Ft. Thomas, a large military reservation, became a reality when the ^{old} garrison at the confluence of the Ohio and Licking Rivers was abandoned and moved to the Kentucky Highlands.

Newport is strictly a city of home owners as statistics show that seventy percent of all residents own their own homes. More than fifty percent of Newport's working population find employment in Cincinnati.
