45. Description and House Plan:

The two-story brick house consists of a cubical main block with an original two-story ell. The plan is unusual in the county--central passage and double-pile. The massiveness of the house is broken by the recessed double gallery in the main facade and by the roof form, parallel gable-fronts separated by a shallow-pitched roof over the central passage.

The gallery in the main front consists three arches on each floor, the central arches being wider and taller than the flanking arches, with applied decoration of sawn wood. The one-story gallery on the eastside (right) is much simpler: shed-roofed with square, wooden Greek Revival piers and a wooden parapet at the south end. This parapet, which disguised the unclassical pitch of the shed roof, was recently reconstructed from a historical photograph.

The eave brackets are paired, and there are oculi in both front gables. The cut stone foundation is finished with a smooth-cut stone water table in the front of the house and a brick water table elsewhere. The lintels and sills are of stone.

Additions include a 1-room, 1-story, gabled brick block appended to the north end of the ell in the late 19th century, a 1-room, 1-story, shed-roofed frame block, with a wooden deck on the northwest, added to the west side of the main block in about the 1960s, and a wooden staircase added to the east side of the ell in about the 1960s, giving access to the second floor of the ell. Alterations include the brick and concrete replacement floor of the east porch and vertical chimney braces erected recently on the roof to stabilize all four chimneys in the main block of the house.

A concrete block garage behind the house was erected recently and does not contribute to the historical character of the property.
